Course Highlight: ECN 310 Professor Jonelis

- The world economy is composed of developed and developing economies. This course will help students understand the perspective of economics through developing countries
- Students will: learn about economic development through measurement and theory, be able to explain development strategies for different countries, discuss benefits and costs of economic integration, and describe the institutional drivers of economic development. The focus will be given to both formal institutions, like systems of government and legal codes, as well as, informal institutions, like culture, corruption, and conflict.
- Exams, quizzes, presentation/project
- Prerequisites: ECN101, ECN102
